They temporarily leave their families, stay in fragile tents with no heating, follow the oath of self-denial, abstain from enjoying worldly pleasures, eat non-spicy vegetarian food once a day, and try to live a strict life of renunciation and devotion. They immerse themselves twice daily—morning and evening—in the waters of the confluence, listen to spiritual discourses, and participate in religious rituals. They also help in the daily operations of the camp. Why do an estimated 2.5 million kalpavasis and tens of millions of pilgrims willingly sacrifice personal comforts and endure hardships at the Kumbh Mela? What do they receive in return? Many respond to attain 'Moksha' (liberation) or to live a successful, prosperous life. All this and more shall be answered in this walking tour.
